In his post-Pop style, Burton Morris boldly projects an enticing mood of happiness, high energy and fun. In his paintings, Morris energizes every day images with his unique style, so that a steaming coffee cup, a swirling martini and a dancing popcorn box all take on a new life under his paintbrush. The dagger-like slashes, which are recurrent in his artwork, represent the energy he has imbued into each piece.

Burton Morris Studios was established in 1990 and his rise to fame began when NBC engaged him to produce artwork for the hit US sitcom, “Friends”, something Burton continued to do for the full 10 year seasons of the acclaimed worldwide hit show.

Burton Morris already has an amazing and substantial body of work behind him and his artwork is displayed in galleries and museums around the world and is featured in the collections of The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and The Jimmy Carter Center amongst many others. One-man exhibitions include Sotheby’ of Amsterdam, the International Olympic Museum and the Hickory Museum of Art. Morris` artwork has been exhibited in 20 cities and 8 countries across 3 different continents.

Because of his continued success celebrity owners of Morris` work include the likes of Oprah Winfrey, Roy Disney, Stan Lee, Brad Pitt, Courtney Cox, Keanu Reeves, Donald Trump, Jay Leno and President Sarkozy of France. Among corporate owners Morris can include the likes of Chanel, Microsoft, Sony, Apple, Rolex, Samsung, Kelloggs, Heinz, Absolut Vodka and Coca Cola.

Burton Morris` artwork is a must see and must have for any collector of pop art who is looking for the next pop artist to take on the mantle of the likes of Andy Warhol and Roy Lichtenstein.
